

New Jersey Mayor Wildes To Run For State Senate

Michael Wildes, mayor of Englewood, has announced that he is running as the Democratic candidate for the New Jersey State Senate from the 37th Legislative District. Mr. Wildes said that he "decided to pursue this office because the communities included in the 37th District need much more effective and efficient representation in our state capitol in Trenton. For years, our communities have languished near the bottom of the list, while other districts in Bergen County received millions in educational aid, homeland security grants and tax rebates from Trenton.

With education costs and property taxes rising faster than many of us can believe, it's time that our communities receive their fair share of benefits from Trenton."

In addition, Wildes stated, "I have made education a top priority and worked to improve Englewood's public schools through a major capital improvement program. I have also worked to bridge gaps and promote racial tolerance by creating a task force to review the treatment of Latino immigrants in the city. Finally, I have taken steps to ensure that government lives within its means by opposing legislation which would have increased Englewood's city spending by over a million dollars."
